Hong Kong 02 — What's New

Summary of everything added to the site · final build, November 2026 · https://7359.vercel.app/

01 A clearer home page

A new header message — "A journey into news discernment" with the line "Let's read closely, think critically and share responsibly !" — sits beside the logo, on desktop and phones.

The old red ticker became a branded GLOBAL MARKETS bar: every index is named, with its value and a green (up) or red (down) change, scrolling slowly and pausing on hover.

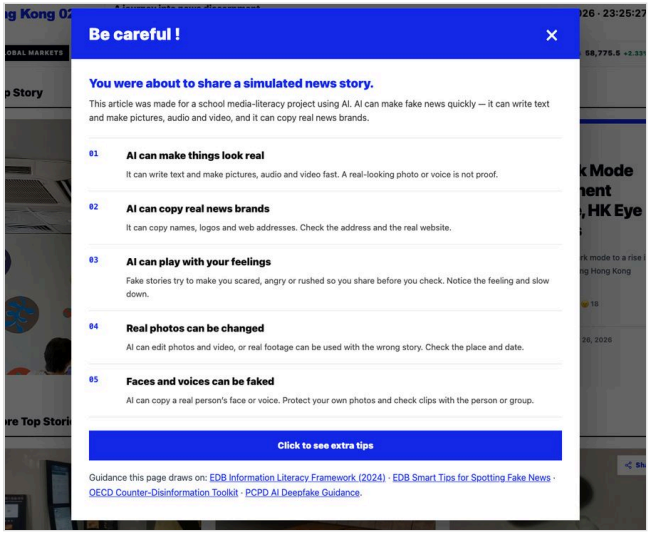

02 Top Story and preview cards now do more

The Top Story has a Share button, an animated New ! tag and a blue "Click to view article" button. Every preview card has the same New ! tag, a blue "Click to read the full article" button and its own Share button — and all cards are exactly the same height.

The New ! badge animates like a sound wave, letter by letter, and disappears once that story has been opened.

03 A two-step share experience

Sharing no longer jumps straight to a warning. It starts with a confirmation — “Are you sure you want to share the article?” — then opens an education panel. Fake stories open on an AI page explaining how AI makes fake news, with five points and “Click to see extra tips”; the tips page then shows the article’s five checks plus Stop · Verify · Think, with a back button.

04 A real story to compare against

Alongside the nine fake stories there is now a real report — The Guardian's Ebola warning — bylined to reporter Sarah Johnson. It opens on the 01–05 checks page (with underlined links to the original article and other coverage), then Stop · Verify · Think, then a 06 video invitation.

Yes this is a real news article !

01

Who wrote it

This article is from The Guardian, a UK news website. It was written by Sarah Johnson on 28 October 2026.
Read the original article.

02

What the report says

A top health official said Africa's Ebola outbreak could reach the UK. The article names the official and explains the situation.

03

Why it is real

The official is named, the date is given, a big news site published it, and other news sites reported the same thing.

04

Before you share

It is real, but it can still be shared in a misleading way. Read the whole article, check the date, and don't call it an epidemic.

05

Other reports

Other reports and official updates: The Conversation · The News · UKHSA · Africa CDC.

STOP · VERIFY · THINK

01

STOP

Stop before you share. Strong feelings like fear or anger can make a fake story feel true.

> The headline is a real warning, not a hoax. Stop anyway: read the whole article and check the date.

Find the original report or study. Check the organisation's official website and compare with trusted news sites.

> Open the Guardian article, then check the UK Health Security Agency and the Africa CDC. Compare with other trusted news sites.

03

THINK

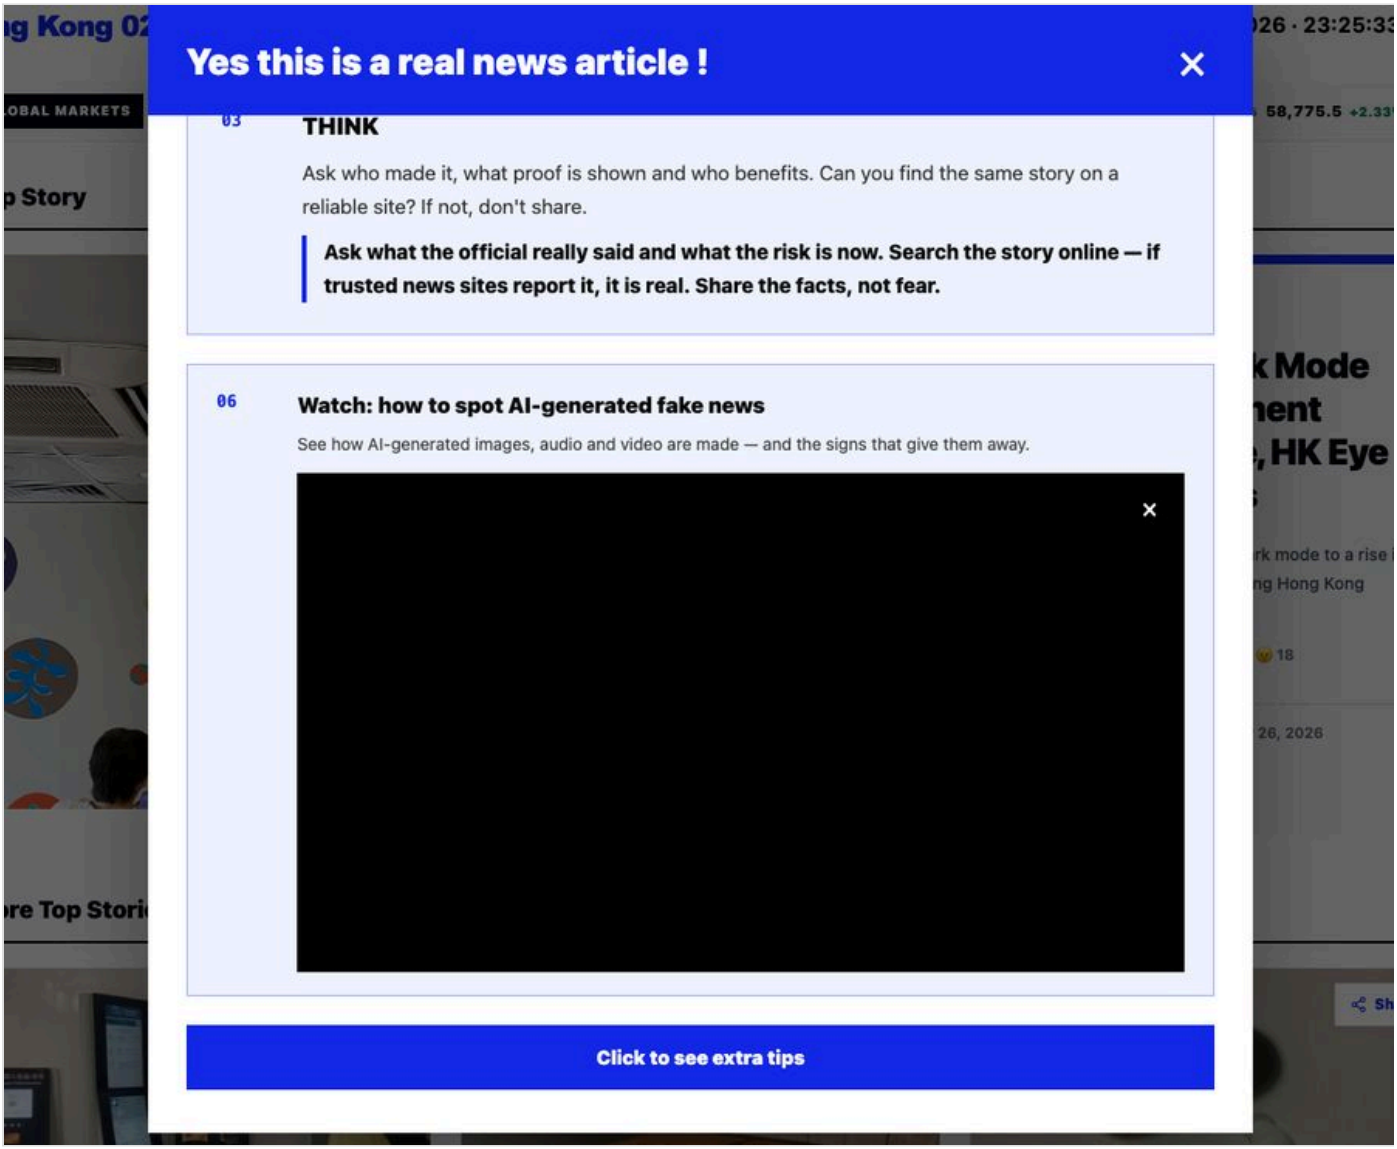

Ask who made it, what proof is shown and who benefits. Can you find the same story on a reliable site? If not, don't share.

> Ask what the official really said and what the risk is now. Search the story online — if

05 Embedded video, fullscreen and closable

“Click here to watch the video !” opens the embedded YouTube player and goes fullscreen automatically, scaling to the device. A round × closes it; leaving fullscreen brings the button back.

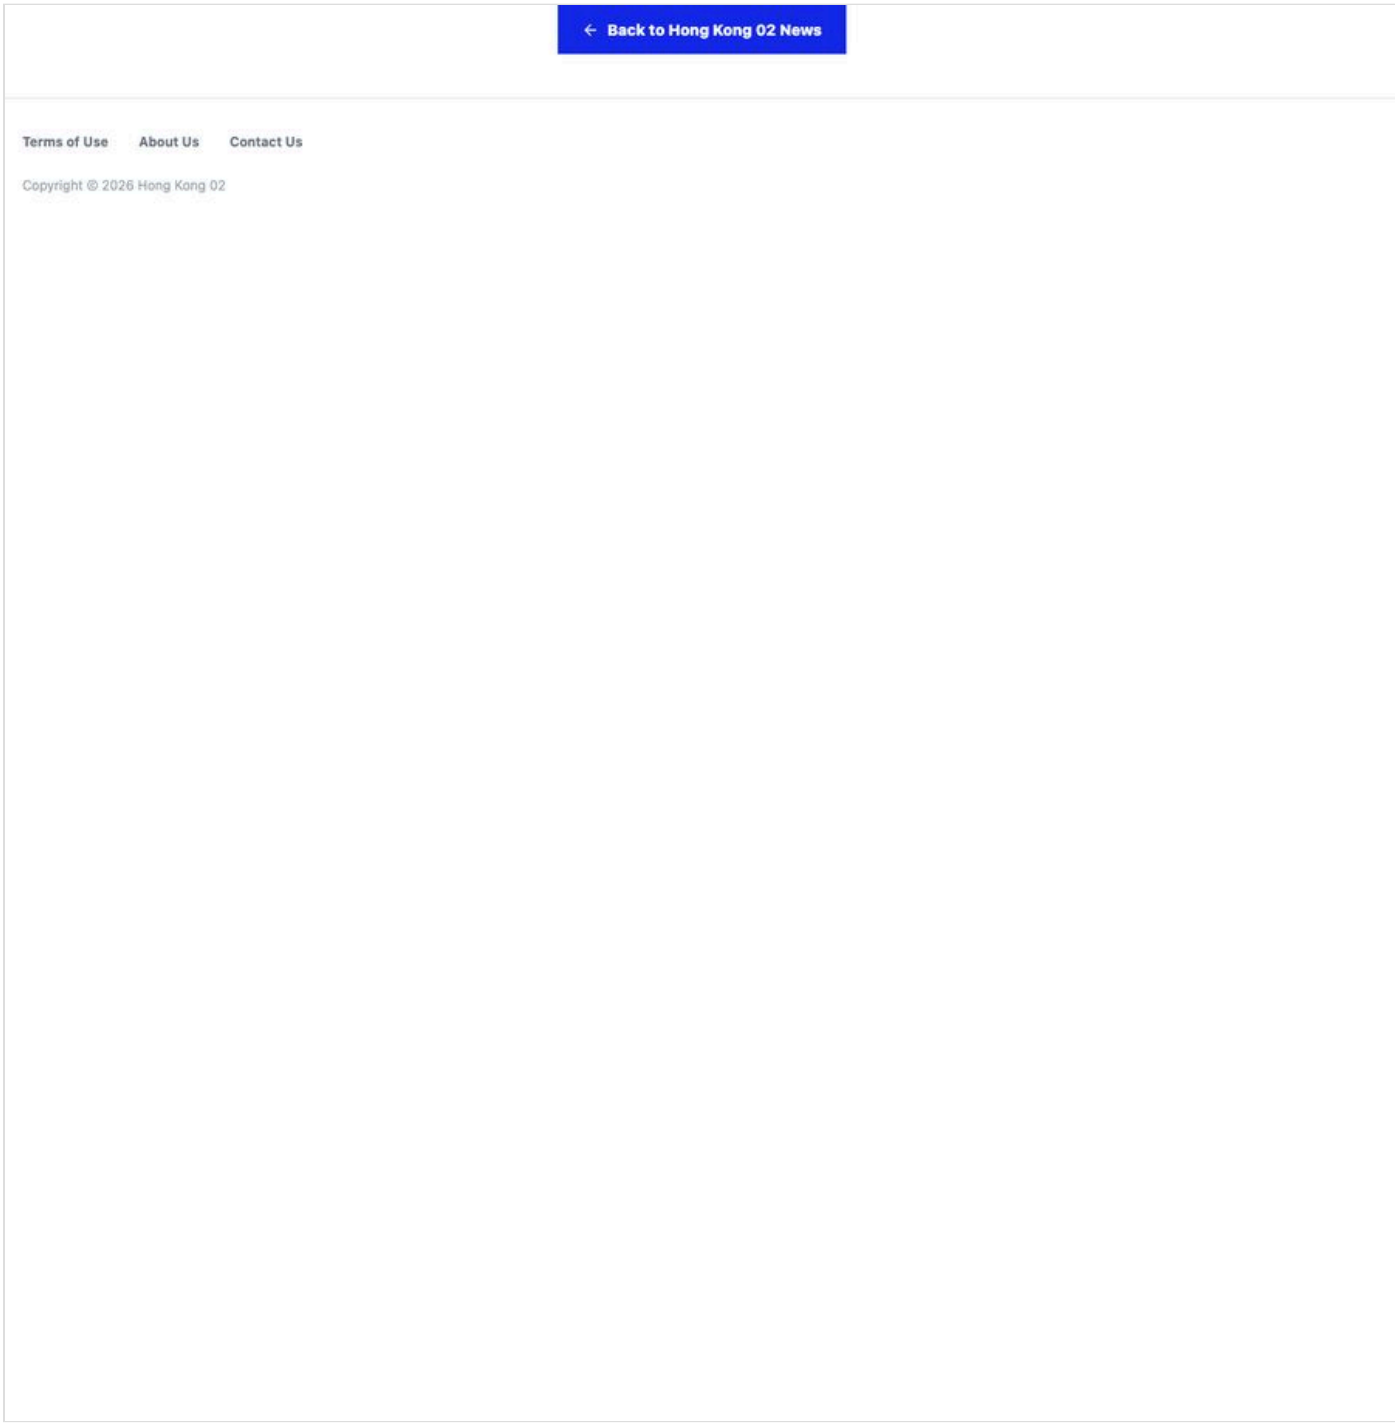

06 An AI page that cites its sources

For real stories, "Click to see extra tips" opens the AI page — "AI can also create fake versions of real news." — with five plain-language points and a guidance line linking to the EDB Information Literacy Framework (2024), EDB Smart Tips for Spotting Fake News, the OECD Counter-Disinformation Toolkit and PCPD AI Deepfake Guidance.

07 Comment threads that feel like a forum

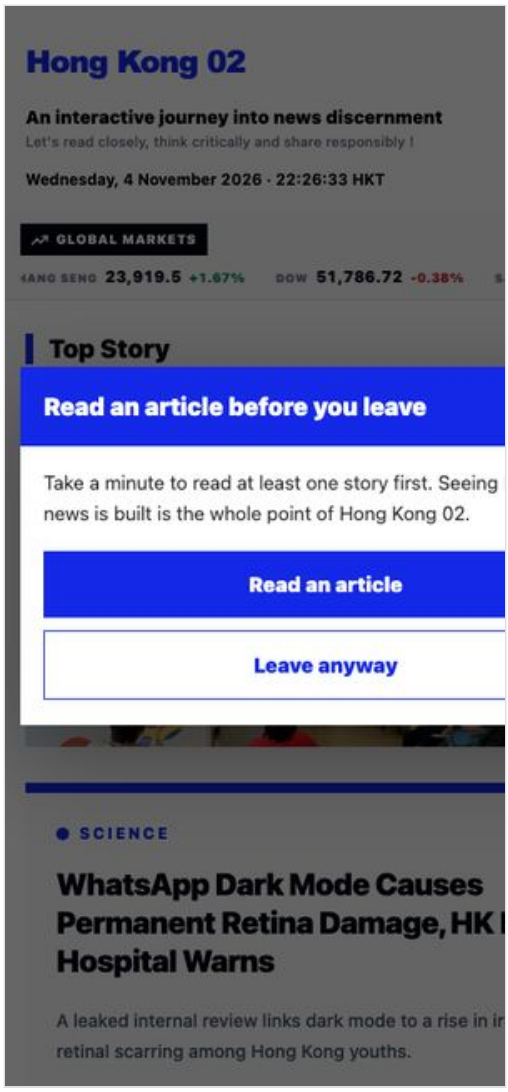

Each story now has its own thread of 27–35 natural comments — reactions, questions, jokes, memes, light mockery and people saying they will share — with no comments declaring the story “fake” or “real”.

08 Gentle nudges to read something

After one minute without interaction, a reminder appears once: "Let's explore some of the articles!" And if someone tries to leave without opening a story, a branded "Read an article before you leave" prompt appears (plus the browser's leave confirmation on tab close).

09 Smaller additions

Terms page	Rewritten into seven sections, adding Educational Simulation Disclosure and Media Literacy & Ethical Dilemmas.
Footer	Added: "All stories shown here are original fictional editorial content for this publication concept."
Phone support	Checked at 320, 360, 375, 390, 414 and 430 px: no horizontal scrolling, market names readable, dialogs fit.
Live preview mode	An internal ?preview=1 mode auto-reloads the page within about two seconds when a site file changes.
